We, the undersigned, have this day examined the foregoing statement and find it correct.

REMARKS.

The prosperity of our schools for the past year will compare very favorably with that of previous years. The teachers, we think, have been uniformly successful in sustaining good order, and the rank in recitations has been kept up to a proper standard. As we believe that the merits, or faults, of each teacher are stamped in a greater or less degree upon the school, so are the merits or faults of the parents of each district in a like manner obvious, for if parents make up their minds that so far as they are concerned a good school shall be sustained, measureless is the influence which they exert. Punctuality in attendance is the first consideration. See that your children are in their proper places at the commencement of each day's duties; see that they are present regularly every school day during the term, unless prevented by sickness. Those who from a mistaken idea run contrary to this rule, are laying up for themselves untold evils in the future, for if children are deprived of the privilege of obtaining an education in their early youth, they are the ones who will suffer, and not the teacher, for scholars will always take advantage of division or lack of sympathy on the part of their parents. Parents should also encourage the teacher by their frequent presence in the school room. We have been fortunate this year in securing for the most part teachers of previous experience, but we are unfortunate in having so small an amount of school money. In districts one, two and four, exhibitions were held and money raised to lengthen the fall terms. Much praise is due the pupils for their efforts in this direction, and to their teachers, who so ably assisted them. In conclusion we would say, we feel that, in general, we have had the sympathy and co-operation of parents and teachers, and it should be ever borne in mind that the welfare of our common schools is of the first importance to all.

Respectfully submitted,

ANDREW J. CURRIER,
